II. TEXTUAL ANALYSIS (10 marks)

Read the following text carefully and answer the questions set below.

MANAGING BUSINESSES

During the many years we have worked with and studied small- and medium-sized businesses, we have found that the most nagging question for entrepreneurs is: what can be done to increase the chances of success for my new business or improve the performance of my existing business?

While the business environment continues to change, the answer to the question has not. What is this time-tested advice? It is simply to:

- Carefully research the firm's existing or intended industry, market and competition; identify the factors that do or will account for its success or its failure; and make an informed, educated estimate of the chances for success.

- Develop a detailed plan for favourably influencing the factors that determine success; for operating the business; and for acquiring and managing the human, physical, and financial resources that are needed to operate it profitably.

In short, the entrepreneur needs to prepare a business plan, or, as it is occasionally referred to, a feasibility study.

Gathering the information and data needed to prepare a complete business plan minimizes the possibility of failure and maximizes the likelihood of success. This is as true for an existing business as for a new venture.

Preparing a business plan converts pipe dreams into realities.
